HOW TIMES HAVE CHANGED!

"It may be of interest in the history of Riverside to know that the growing of opium was tried as an experiment in 1871, the first season the water was available for irrigation early in the season.

"Dr. James P. Greves, secretary of the Southern California Colony Association procured and planted some of the seed of the opium poppy thinking the production of opium would tide over the period (financially) between planting and fruiting of the orange groves...

"It is rather a slow process and under the labor conditions then and now prevailing, it was impossible to make it a paying success and it was never again tried."
